

HARRISON THE MAN.

So Says the Able Secretary of Agriculture.

THE STRENGTH OF THE ALLIANCE

Is Not Appreciated by the Old Parties. If Hill Gets New York, He Will Wipe Out Cleveland and Be the Democratic Nominee—Blaine is a Strong Man.

New York, June 10.—"I have paid very little attention to politics," said Secretary Rusk to a World reporter yesterday. "My duties are so exacting just now that I have no opportunity to talk of anything but business. You see, we have raised the department above the mere seed-distributing bureau that it was, having added the meat inspection and other important divisions."

"Is Harrison a candidate for re-nomination?"

"Oh, I know nothing of that at all. He never even mentioned the subject to me. I can't say anything about it. Of course, I suppose he is a candidate. That is, I naturally suppose so. He is a good man and will be very strong."

"Will Blaine be a candidate?"

"Now, I can't say," he answered, with a quiet stroke of his gray chin beard. "Mr. Blaine has not said that he would be a candidate, but I hardly think he would refuse if the convention nominated him."

"Do you suppose Mr. Blaine or any of his friends authorized Frank Leslie's to announce that he would not be a candidate?"

"No; that statement was not authorized, at least not by Mr. Blaine. Still, I think he will not be a candidate, for he is well satisfied with his position in the Cabinet. I don't say this on any authority, mind you, but it is my opinion. Mr. Blaine and I are the best of friends, for I admire him very much."

"Then you are for Harrison?"

"Yes; I am a member of his Cabinet, and am loyal to my chief. He is stronger than at any time since he was elected. Confidently, I think he will be nominated."

"Is the Farmers' Alliance growing?"

"As I am not a member of the Alliance I am unable to tell. That is where their great strength comes in. They have a secret organization, and the members, be they Democrats or Republicans, vote as directed. The old parties have no idea of their strength until after election. They are very strong in Iowa, Kansas, South Dakota and some of the Southern States. If they are able to hold their vote together they may throw the next Presidential election into the House of Representatives."

"There are very few Alliance men in Wisconsin," continued the Secretary. "We will pay no attention to them there. I believe the Republicans will be a unit for Harrison, and it looks as though Vilas would have everything his way, which means a Cleveland delegation to the Democratic convention. Now that is a contest I am interested in, and am willing to talk on the subject. I must say that I do not regard Cleveland any too highly. If Hill gets the delegation from New York he will be nominated sure. The South will oppose the former. If I were a Democrat I would be a Hill man. From what I can see he is very strong in New York."

"Who will oppose Harrison for the nomination?"

"Well, there is General Alger. Western papers talk about him."

"And yourself?"

"Oh, no; no sir. That is, if they do, it is in jest," he laughed heartily. "I am for Mr. Harrison. It is too bad that Mr. Blaine is not well. He and the President are the best of friends. They correspond regularly. The President was greatly disturbed over Mr. Blaine's illness. But we understand that Mr. Blaine is now practically recovered. He will soon be back in Washington. Speaking about Blaine, what a strong man he is. Everywhere you go there is the same talk of Blaine."

"Do you think he would make a strong candidate?"

"Yes; stronger than in '94—much stronger. Still I know nothing about his willingness to run and can say nothing. He is very strong, though."

"And you want Harrison nominated?"

"Yes. Harrison is my man. He will, I think, get the nomination."

Common Sense in the School Room.

YOUTH'S COMPANION.

A teacher in a suburban school, not long ago, gave her pupils twelve minutes in which to write an "abstract." A shoe was the subject selected by her, and the boys were to write in the first person. No limit to the number of lines or words was given them.

Most of the boys wrote—and erased during the whole time allotted, but the teacher noticed one fellow who sat idle until the time was within two minutes of expiring. As the scholars filed out she said to him: "Brown, did you finish your abstract?"

"Yes, ma'am," he answered.

Curious to see what he could have written in so short a time, she looked over the papers and found this:

"I am a worn out shoe; my coffin is the ash barrel; my grave, the dump."

She says that almost as firmly impressed on her memory as this remarkable composition, is the expression of amazement on the boy's face the next morning when he saw the "100" mark on his paper.

The Yankee Schoolma'am.

The New England schoolma'am is a treasure and a heroine wherever you find her, whether in a Yankee wayside temple of learning or leading western society towards civilization as a missionary's wife. At Jeffersonville yesterday she—several of her—put to practical use the "fire drill," the march our teachers teach our children now-a-days to use in case of fire. Without nerves, without panic, to the tune and time of "hay-foot, straw-foot," the schoolma'am marched seven score lads and lassies out of the burning building. God bless her, collectively and representatively!

A Gentleman's Pleasure.

Edmund Yates in New York Tribune.

Cunliffe Lister, who has just been made a peer, has laid out upward of £1,000,000 sterling during the last nine years in purchasing estates in Yorkshire. He began in 1882, when he bought Swinton Park, near Masham, from the heirs of Mrs. Danby Vernon Harcourt for £450,000. His next investment was the estate of Verrall Abbey, which adjoins Swinton Park and for which he paid $350,000 to Lord Albemarle's trustees. Last year he bought the Middleham Castle property and also the mineral estate of Acton Hall, near Pontefract, which last cost him £120,000. Swinton Park, which was long the seat of the Danbys, is one of the finest places in the North of England, there being a picturesque castellated house, which is now being much enlarged, and a romantic dookport. The best grouse moor in Yorkshire is on this estate.

A FAVORED REGION.

Greatest Combination of Wealth-Producing Materials in the World.

Prof. N. S. Shaler, of Harvard University.

In the mountainous portion of these States of the Virginia group we have an abundance of mineral wealth, the search for which has but begun. Gold, iron, copper, zinc, and various other substances of economic importance abound in the upland portion of this area, while the lowland parts have as yet afforded but small supplies of such materials, phosphates being the only geologic element of any importance. It is evident, therefore, that the plainland region of this district is to develop purely agricultural industries, while the upland section, by its admirable combination of soil, noble forests and mineral resources, is to have more varied industries, and therefore a more diversified life.

Although within the above-mentioned States the resources of fossil fuel are limited, we find, immediately on the west of the district, and everywhere convenient to it, the vast coal measures of Tennessee, Kentucky and West Virginia fields, which afford bituminous coals quite equal to those which have been the foundations of the commercial industries of Great Britain. Thus, this region of southern uplands has in its soil, its forests and its mineral resources, a combination of advantages greater than those of any other equal area in the world. In addition to these favoring conditions the region possesses an admirable climate. In winter the temperature falls low enough to insure the preservation of bodily vigor; in summer the heat is ardent, that the lower lying region of the New England and New York group of States. In the Virginia region we find a climate resembling in its range of temperatures those which characterize the most favored regions of the Old World, and it is there perhaps we may look for the preservation of our race's best characteristics.

The basin of the Ohio, with the exception of some parts of its headwaters, the Upper Kanawha and the tributaries of the Tennessee, lies well within the broad trough of the Mississippi Valley. It is thus in the path of the great air movements from the Gulf of Mexico northward, from the Arctic Sea southward.

The mineral resources of the Ohio Valley have a somewhat singular distribution. From Western Alabama round to the headwaters of the Ohio in Pennsylvania, we have a continuous belt of country abounding in coal and iron. Nowhere in the world, so far as it has been explored, is there any region of equal extent where these two substances, both for the first importance to man, each requiring the other for its most important uses, are geographically so united. In the western part of the Ohio Valley, and separated from this eastern and southern section by a wide interval of fertile lands, lies the western coal field, extending from Central Kentucky to Central Indiana and Illinois. Taken as a whole, the area of the Ohio Valley has a more perfect association of fuel and iron resources together with those which are afforded by any single soil than any other part of the world.

In addition to the supply of energy contained in the coal beds tributary to this district, there are two other sources of power accessible to the inhabitants of this valley—petroleum and natural gas. The deposits of petroleum appear to be in the main limited to a field occupying a portion of Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Eastern Ohio, and to another and less important district on the waters of the Cumberland river, near the point where it crosses the division between Kentucky and Tennessee. Although the quantity of petroleum accessible at any point in this valley appears to be much less than that which can be obtained in the famous Caspian or Baku field, the district is probably all things considered, the most extensive source of supply of this substance which the world is likely to afford. The natural gas of the Ohio Valley appears to be far more considerable in quantity than that contained within any other equal area. Thus in this district we have three known sources of valuable subterranean energy—coal, petroleum and natural gas—in more advantageous conditions, as regards quantity and nearness to fertile agricultural areas, than in any other region of the world.

We thus see that the Ohio group of States has, from the point of view of its resources, singular advantages over any other part of the continent for the maintenance of a vast population engaged in industries, both those of the soil and those of the shop. Within a century the area occupied by these States is likely to contain a larger population than that which now exists in all English-speaking countries. Although this population is destined to be to a great extent engaged in mining and manufacturing, there is room in this country for an agricultural people exceeding in numbers the present population of the United States, for, as before remarked, there is hardly any untillable land in its area, and except for the limitations which the necessary preservation of the forests put upon the extension of the tilled fields, ninety-eight hundredths of its area can be won to husbandry."

A Progressive Eucharist Protests.

Dayton Journal.

The late general assembly in Detroit condemned progressive eucharist and "all amusements in which Christians cannot engage in Christ's name." There are apprehensions that this might demoralize the Dayton Pelee club, which consists of thirteen Presbyterians, twelve Baptists and fifteen other sorts. And about all the party play eucharist or something else, but playing "in Christ's name" nobody ever heard of Pelee. But they had lots of fun and did nobody any harm. No good Christian can ride a bicycle under this rule except "in Christ's name." Oh, for Heaven's sake, do let's have a little common sense in religion about the very commonest things of social life. It makes thoughtful people weary to reflect upon the pains taken to make agnostics and infidels. There is no more harm in a social game of eucharist without stakes than there is in blind man's buff or pussy wants a corner.

Escaped Their Attention.

Cumberland, Md., News.

The information that may be gleaned from the free trade papers that twenty-three big iron furnaces in the Mahoning Valley, of Ohio, and the Shenandoah Valley, of Pennsylvania, which have been idle since January 1st, have all been put in blast within a short time, must have been overlooked on the proofs by the "calamity editors." Such evidence of returning activity in a great industry is disastrous to the calamity man's cry that the McKinley bill is ruining the country.

A NOTED YOUNG MAN.

Death of Mr. Everett Gray, London Representative of Virginia Enterprises.

The news of the death of Mr. Everett Gray, of Messrs. Vivian, Gray & Co., at the early age of thirty-six, was received in the Stock Exchange yesterday and by a very large circle of friends with very deep regret. Mr. Gray had a touch of influenza about three weeks ago, and left London for Aix-les-Bains to recruit. In spite of his ailment Mr. Gray was in capital spirits before his departure, and his visit to the baths was regarded more as a means of recruiting after a spell of hard work than of staying off a serious illness. But, unhappily, he contracted a malarial fever at Aix which prostrated him, and to which he ultimately succumbed. On Tuesday, intelligence came from Mrs. Gray that he had passed through the crisis of the fever, but apparently a relapse occurred, and Mr. Gray died peacefully about ten o'clock on Wednesday night.

Mr. Gray's engaging personality was well known in the city, where he had practically spent the whole of his active life. He was a Scotsman, a native of Perth, and was educated at Trinity College, Glenalmond. After leaving school Mr. Gray went to Brussels, where, in the service of the Banque de Paris et des Pays Bas, he became acquainted with Continental methods of business, a knowledge which was invaluable to him in later years. Messrs. Vivian, Gray & Co. having important connections abroad. In 1872, at the age of eighteen, Mr. Everett Gray joined Mr. Vivian, whose partner he afterwards became, and his talents and quick intelligence soon won him a high position in financial circles in London. Mr. Gray was particularly identified with Virginian enterprises. His firm acted as London agents and correspondents of the Norfolk & Western Railroad, and Mr. Gray had a seat on the board of the company. To his prescience and knowledge of the capabilities of the State, the investing public owes the introduction here of several of the most substantial of Virginian undertakings, such as the Flat-Top Coal Land Association and the Virginia Development Company. Mr. Gray's personal and business qualities were as much appreciated on the other side of the Atlantic as here, and his frequent visits to Philadelphia and to Virginia to keep himself posted in the affairs of the enterprises in which he, his firm and its clients were interested were always welcomed. To meet Mr. Gray in a business connection was to admire the grasp of his mind, the charm of his manner and the frankness of his character, and those who have so met him can understand the intensity of the grief which his death has brought to his family and his closer friends.
